Howl about the good, inspiring things you do and see! Do you or someone else make life better for girls and work for equality? Share your "howl" on NewMoon.com's "Howl at the Moon" message board.

A law finally passed in Britain saying that girls born into the royal family have the same succession rights to the throne as boys do. It used to be the rule that if a girl was born first, then a boy, the boy would get the throne before his sister. I am happy this has now changed, but I think it is ridiculous that we had to put up with this sexist law until 2011!

I help out at a nursery school, and I love how the little boys (they're all about 4) can play with the dolls and dress up in dresses. A lot of places would discourage the boys from playing with dresses and steer them toward the trucks, but here they can play with whatever they want to.

Recently I went to a special aviation seminar for girls only! The aviation field involves flying airplanes and related jobs. Many women spoke with us about their jobs, which included things such as working in airport control towers. We even got to speak to a female airline pilot who flies internationally. We also designed our own dream terminals and drew them on paper. I was so happy to hear from women who have jobs sometimes considered only for men. They all really inspired me and reminded me that girls can do ANYTHING!

I think this is a beautiful true story: When the Christian Heartsong Church in Memphis, Tennessee, learned that an Islamic Center was coming to town, they put out a big sign saying "Welcome." The Memphis Islamic Center met with them and later invited them to join them with some of their activities. The two groups volunteer together at a homeless shelter. Heartsong Church invited the Islamic Center to use their church for Ramadan while the Islamic Center was still being built.
